value based education. Students learn through implied activities namely group discussions, seminars, workshops and also by utilizing library resources. There is no substitute for live classroom interaction for these young scholars. M.Ed. students are also associated with providing guidance to B.Ed. & Integrated students.

About the Programme

Research is a key instrumentation for creation, expansion improvement, stabilization and reformation/ modification of any field of study or area of knowledge. Behavioural Sciences, being a distinct area of study or domain of knowledge, are in many ways different from general sciences and many other fields of study with respect to their contexts, purposes, contents, methodologies, outcomes and so on. Research is inevitable in any field of study or area of knowledge for the structural and functional changes, but the perspective of research changes across the fields of study or areas of knowledge considering the nature, thrust and methodology of the fields of study or areas of knowledge. While the extent of use of scientific method in pure sciences/ basic sciences is more in rigour but the extent of use of scientific method in behavioural sciences & Humanities is less in rigour. Considering the perspective of behavioural sciences, the perspective of research in behavioural sciences becomes more thematic, narrative and analytical in comparison to the perspectives of research in pure sciences and their allied areas. Based on all these perspectives, a Faculty Development Programme is designed to proved adequate understanding to the stakeholders of higher Education associated with the field of behavioural/ Social sciences & Humanities regarding the latest perspectives of research in behavioural sciences. In this programme the interdisciplinary perspectives of research in behavioural sciences & Humanities would be prioritized.

Objectives of the Programme

1. To acquaint the participants with the context of conducting research in Social sciences & Humanities.
2. To acquaint the participants with the similarities and differences among research in behavioural science and other sciences including general sciences.
3. To acquaint the participants with the different latest paradigms and research methodologies used in behavioural sciences & Humanities.
4. To acquaint the participants with the latest tools, techniques, processes and steps that are involved in research in behavioural sciences & Humanities.
5. To involve the participants in hands-on-experience in conducting research in Social sciences & Humanities.
6. To acquaint participants with issues, problems, challenges and future prospects of research in Social sciences & Humanities especially from interdisciplinary perspectives.
